The Layers have become a must have concept, when you are working on the images most of the time. If you are working on an image you can create a new group and drag the marker to it. There are lot of options ranging from the color samples to rotating the sample, when you are using it. The list of features has not ended with the Pen Tool, There are lot of new things that have been introduced for you, like shape layers, paths and much more. In the bottom right corner there is the panel, from which you can add your own menus with the existing set of features and add your own custom features. I am sure you have seen this panel from a lot of Artist, as they have their own set of scripts to manage and create the custom workflow of their own. Visual effects, which we use to strengthen the look of the images have become a great add on, while there is no need to pay to get this feature in the Apple version. This feature makes it very easy for you to create a vintage and contemporary look by adding and removing the Tint effect. It is also very easy to add high resolution headphones to make any photo look like it has been made for royalty. The curves menu gives you the flexibility of using different colors. You can use any colors to do the strokes and to adjust the different tones and highlights, making the image always up to date. Few new features like Deblur have been introduced for you. While the color hire tool isn't a new addition, the New 16-bit RGB Layers opened up an entirely new wave of creative possibilities. Now you can open, save, and name up to 16-bit layers for use within all images, plus you can change the alpha channels of those layers at any time. This seemingly small change allows you to produce vivid colors and vibrant textures that were impossible before. Even though you can't choose which 16-bit layer you want to use, you'll still have the ability to access, copy and paste, and name them as with any other layer.
