Photoshop is a great tool for many uses. The problem is, Photoshop just doesn't feel fast if it's slow. Check out the speed of the plug-ins. Photoshop's core team could make the plug-ins faster, but they haven't done it yet. Plus, I've seen nothing to indicate that Adobe is intending to fix the speed of Photoshop. Parallels may be there because Photoshop CS6 now runs more like Photoshop CS6 than CS5 (where I would go to the plug-ins directory and search for Photoshop Plug-ins and actually find something). But Photoshop still doesn't feel as fast as it should. While I don't use Lightroom, I know that there are a lot of folks that think that Lightroom is better than Photoshop. I cannot say that I agree with that. While certain aspects of Lightroom are cooler than Photoshop, none of them are better. I know that this may be a hard pill to swallow, and that you have become accustomed to Lightroom's user interface and features, but this is just the truth no matter what you want to believe. I am in the process of moving from Photoshop to PaintShop Pro, for a few reasons, that include, the simplicity of painting compared to Photoshop, and the fact that I know that I can get better quality images in PaintShop Pro than I can in Photoshop. I know that this comparison is going to really anger some of you, but I am simply stating the facts. I've used Photoshop since version 2? I've really enjoyed the software but always felt Adobe hasn't kept up with the times. I think CS6 was a great move in the right direction by Adobe, but I still feel like it has a way to go....including the web. The five major features I have not seen discussed too much are: 1. the current 12 pt. tool is still way too difficult to use, 2. Adobe's support and documentation for the entire suite has gone right down hill, 3. Adobe's move to charge extra for the cloud is a huge dis-service to the average user, and 4. The competition continues to come faster and stronger. I actually like Adobe's direction but it needs to be supported and addressed....fast!

When you choose Adobe Photoshop CC, you get an enhanced "Overlay" layer for nondestructive adjustment of individual elements of an image, using a process known as masking. The ability to quickly add, subtract, and fine-tune individual elements in a photo, even to partially mask out an image element that's overlaid on a photo, is a power that will provide an entirely new way of creating professional desktop and web imagery. It enables you to mask away elements such as posters, newspaper articles, credit cards, and advertisements, and then later bring back what's left of masked areas using the new effects available in Photoshop. Use Adobe Photoshop on the web by enabling hardware acceleration on the web page and using the 'Save for Web' feature in the File menu. With the 'Save for Web' option, you can continue to work on an image or open an image from a previous session. Use the new Layer Panel navigation to easily define and manipulate layers, and use layer masks to hide parts of a layer, refine a layer mask, or copy a layer mask to other layers, which can then be used in complementary layers. Adobe Photoshop enables you to save any content, easily and securely in the Data Store. You also have the ability to check and download content in the Data Store at any time, also without touching the original files. After the transition to the native GPU data path, use Photoshop CC to deliver high-end treatment that features high-fidelity performance and image quality for a perfect presentation. Adobe Photoshop DNG Files can be shared on social media platforms using Adobe Photoshop DNG presets without losing editability and access to RAW level data.
